Sheep Rid of Ticks By Improved New Dip

Rotenone Basis of Effective Treatment

Sheep ticks are widely distributed throughout the United States. Unlike the true tick, they do not stay attached to one place, but move about in the fleece, making a new puncture each time they feed.

An economical and effective dipping solution for rolding sheep of these ticks has been developed at the University of California. It consists of six ounces of derris powder containing 5 per cent rotenone to 100 gallons of water.

Considerable labor is saved as the solution is easy to prepare and one treatment is sufficient. The rotenone kills not only the adult tick but the eggs as well, and remains effective in the fleece for several weeks. The cost of the new dip should not exceed 20 cents per 100 gallons. Allowing for replacement of dip, the solution should not cost more than 1½ cents for each animal.

New silent type tractor which has recently been placed on the market.

A silent tractor, particularly good when the power takeoff is used around the poultry or dairy barns. There are 32 known uses for the power take-off, such as churning, separating, feed grinding, pumping and spraying.

The Bear Cat tractor, made by Ellinwood Industries, Los Angeles, is 80 per cent quieter than standard models, due to new improved type of muffler.

New Lamb Brooder

Most of the materials needed for this electric lamb brooder can be found about the yard or farm. A one-pound coffee can is suggested for the reflector. If available, instead of wood, celotex or plywood is ideal material for this type of brooder.

A 100-watt light bulb will prove satisfactory, with hardware cloth to cover reflector hole. Burlap, canvas or similar material may be used for curtain.

Result of Terracing

Farmers have had the value of terracing, along with other improved farming methods, brought home to them forcefully by the war and its requirements.

Better yields result when sloping lands are terraced to control erosion and conserve moisture, particularly when supplemented by the best cropping practices. The type of soil, degree of slope and amount of water to be handled determines the type of terrace best suited.

Ramie Yields Fiber Of Many Qualities

Hollow-faced mummies reposing in the Leeds University museum, Englandl, are better dressed, from the viewpoint of quality, than much native moderns of today. After 4,000 years, the cloth in which they are wrapped is still intact. Made from ramie, the oldest natural fiber known to man, the cloth was called "grass linen" by the ancient Egyptians, and although highly desirable as a fabric, it was not made in quantity because of difficulty in getting the fiber from the stalk.

Eight times stronger than cotton and six times stronger than silk, ramie is looming on the textile horizon as a possible rival to "King Cotton." The plant, a stinging nettle (Boehmeria nivea), is indigenous to China and found in Japan, Austria, the Philippines and Brazil. In the United States most ramie is grown in the Everglades section of Florida. Extremely easy to cultivate in warm climates, it can be cut as often as four times a year, grows from three to nine feet long, and the roots continue to sprout and grow, without much attention, for 10 years.

Ramie fiber is one of the longest vegetable fibers known. It is unaffected by mildew, neither shrinks nor stretches, is lustrous and white without bleaching, and washes easily when made into cloth. When used to increase the bulk or weight of plastics and other textiles, it imparts qualities more desirable than those of any fillers now employed. Chemically, ramie and cotton, two of the purest cellulose fibers, are identical; physically, they have decidedly different properties. Twice as resistant to heat as cotton, ramie is unaffected by exposure to grease and oil and accepts dyes more readily than cotton.

Secret Radio Aided Allies' Foreign Operations

A worldwide radio network operated by members of the office of strategic services provided a vital link between agents behind the enemy lines and bases in Washington, London, Cairo, Algiers, Rome and Kunming. Radio operators and cipher personnel were responsible for the fast and accurate transmittal of thousands of items of information to the Allied high command. This branch expanded from an embryo fighting the bitter battle of procurement in Washington to an organization which could send along completely and uniquely equipped radio operators with OSS agents behind the lines. Always in danger of being discovered, usually working under the most adverse conditions, OSS radiomen handled communications between the late Brig. Gen. Theodore Roosevelt Jr., and General Eisenhower while General Roosevelt, acting as the theater commander's personal representative, was negotiating at a secret rendezvous point with the Italian command for the surrender of Germanheld Sardinia. OSS radiomen also guided Merrill's Marauders on their famed march to Myitkina airdrome in Burma. It was over secret radio circuits that arrangements were made for the surrender of the German armies in Italy by Field Marshal von Vietinghoff.

Tropic Paradise

Penang, sometimes called Prince of Wales Island, was the first British possession in the Malay peninsula; it was acquired by the East India company in 1786. It still constitutes one of the few territories actually owned by the British in this area. Most of so-called British Malaya is merely under the protection of Britain, but Penang, Singapore, Province Wellesley, Malacca, and a few widely scattered islands comprise the Straits Settlements, an outright British possession. World travelers have sought out Penang for half a century, regarding it in a class with Tahiti, Martinique and Bali as a tropic isle not to be missed. Many round-the-world junketers left their steamers at Penang and took the Malay railroad down the peninsula to Singapore, there to go aboard again. The island is especially beautiful in the northern part, where a range of mountains 2,500 feet high rises from the sea. A ridge of hills cuts through the central area. The rest of Penang's 110 square miles is fairly level, and largely forested.

Shaded Daffodils

Daffodils have become favorite material for those so fortunate as to possess a bit of woodland. They flourish in shaded locations, coming into bloom under early spring sun before the trees have leaved out, and later the shade protects them so that they ripen their foliage and mature their bulbs without being prematurely ripened by hot summer sun. Another most effective practice is to tuck bulbs in vacant spots all over the garden between other perennials and under the edges of shrubbery so that in their season the daffodils give character to the entire garden, and then their leaves, which are unsightly and flippy during their maturing period, are concealed by the foliage of the perennials which mount above them and provide shade for the daffodils. For this purpose the older and cheaper daffodils and narcissi are ideal and furnish as fine an effect as can be obtained by the larger flowered and much more expensive modern hybrids.

ENGLISH AS SHE IS WROTE AND SPOKE

These items of Americana were contributed by various readers.

Radio commercial: "Ask your grocer for . . . soap chips. If he hasn't got it, he will soon." He will soon what? Will soon get it? Slovenly in the extreme. Correct: He will soon have it.

Ripley's Believe-It-Or-Not (about a Chinese physician who prescribed as a cure powder from a certain paper received with water): "This remedy was so popular that stomachache sufferers have actually swallowed the Sunday paper and drank it up completely." Have drank? Hardly. The past participle should be carried forward: . . . and have drunk it up completely.

Arkansas daily: "Governor Dewey said that he would do all in my power to . . ." Two errors here. Should be: Governor Dewey said that he will do all in his power to . . .

Vegetable Storage

Among the vegetable places for storing vegetables for winter are basements, cellars, pits and caves, banks or mounds and trenches. Dry, well-ventilated basements with a temperature of 40 to 60 degrees will be suitable for onions, sweet potatoes, pumpkins and squash. Cool basements may be used for beets, cabbage, carrots and celery heeled-in in sand. Turnips should be covered with sand. Pits or cellars, dug on hillsides or under buildings, may be used for storing root crops, cabbage, lettuce, celery and endive. Natural caves make ideal storage places, if moisture and ventilation can be controlled. Inside temperature should be above freezing. Many vegetables can be stored in banks or mounds with drainage beneath. Upright flues of cornstalk bundles or a triangle of small boards should provide ventilation. Protection of straw or earth should be provided for coldest winter weather. Potatoes, when hilled, need a shelter. Leafy vegetables may be barked in the rows or transplanted into trenches and protected overhead with straw or brush in coldest weather.

Agriculture In the News

Cranberries

Originally called craneberries, cranberries were found growing wild in the marshes by the Pilgrims in 1620. Containing 13 important minerals and vitamins they are highly prized as a food article.

During late years they found their place in the Industrial field. Cranberry wax added to other waxes will raise the melting point of those waxes.

Ursolic acid from the wax of cranberry skins has important therapeutic applications. The oil from the seeds is used in shampoos. Cranberry meal has become valued as a filler for plastics.

Mountain-Fastnesses Prove Good Hideouts

Remaining areas that the highway isolation of the southern Appalachians are not altogether untrue. That bewildering criss-cross of major and minor ranges threw up formidable barriers which led some families who wandered up into hidden coves to stay there rather than attempt to surmount them.

One interesting incident concerns a mountain Lochinvar, one John Holsclaw, an adventurous hunter, who in 1816 went to Valle Crucis, N. C., and there by wooing or sheer force carried off a young daughter of Col. Bedent Baird. The young woman was taken over a long and circuitous mountain route to the bark shanty which her lover had built on the waters of the Elk river. She was sold she was in Kentucky, and believed it for years.

However one day she heard a bell tinkle which sounded familiar, discovered the bell was hung around the neck of one of her father's steers. Then she found that instead of being in far away Kentucky, she was only eight miles from her father's home at Valle Crucis. According to tradition, she did not resent the deception, and the wilderness honeymooners continued to live happily together.

Waterproof Fabrics

"Water-repellent" is the word for many postwar fabrics that will hit the markets soon. Straw hats that give extra protection by shedding light showers are in prospect, with American-made synthetic straw braid and straw fabrics being treated with a water-repellent chemical before they are fashioned into summer hats for men, women and children. Another interesting development is tough, light, but water-repellent nylon fabrics that will answer a long-felt need in hunting and fishing apparel. Nylon shoe laces, tennis strings and fishing lines and leaders also promise better sport. Home economists say that the water-repellent treatment will help straw hats resist the effects of moisture and perspiration. Finger marks and dust will stay on the surface and can be sponged or brushed off. Handbags of the new straw fabric will use the protective treatment can also be expected.

'Soft' Corn

Corn is "soft" if it is killed by frost before maturity when the moisture in the ears is from 25 to as much as 65 per cent of the total weight of the ears. With a 20 to 25 per cent moisture in the kernels, considerable care is necessary in storing to keep the crib free from husks and shelled corn. At 25 to 30 per cent moisture, husking should be delayed until cold weather. Husks, silks, soft ears and shattered corn should be removed. Kernel moistures over 30 per cent call for drying methods other than cribbing. It is generally agreed that the very best soft corn can be saved by making it into silage from the whole plant if there is room and from the snapped or husked ears if there is not. The most favorable moisture in silage is around 70 per cent.

CARSON - HIX

The wedding of Miss Barbara Hix, daughter of Mrs. Edith Hix, of Richmond, and Crote Carson, son of Mr. and Mrs. Ernest H. Carson, of Appomattox County, took place Saturday, January 12, a 12 o'clock in Mathews Baptist Church, Bixburg, Virginia.

The ceremony was performed by Rev. William Madison Black, of before an altar of evergreens, cut flowers and lighted tapers.

The bride wore a street length dress of aqua crepe with black accessories and a shoulder corsage of lavender orchids. She entered the church with her mother, who wore a silver grey street length dress with black accessories and who gave her daughter in marriage.

The groom's best man was his brother-in-law, Lt. (jg) Nelson Hix, of Lynchburg. The ushers were John Wilson Hix, a cousin of the bride, and Chas. P. Carson, a brother of the groom.

The bride is a graduate of the Appomattox Business College, and has been secretary for several years for Dr. R. E. Alley, editor of the Religious Herald.

The groom, a paratrooper of the 501th Parachute Inf. Bn., and latter of the 82nd Airborne Division served overseas during the war and has recently received his discharge.

After a northern trip, the couple will make their home in Richmond.

IN MEMORIAM- In loving memory of our dear son, Paul Calvin Brown, S 1-C, who was killed in service Jan. 7, 1944.

Dearest son how we miss you,
From Mother and Dad you had to go,
Many sleepless nights I listen,
For your footsteps at the door.

I often sit when all alone,
And think of you and wish you were home.
In tears we pray to meet again,
And you can hear us call your name.

There's a picture in our hear dear son,
More precious than silver or gold,
It's a picture of you, dear Calvin,
That will never grow old.

Always so true, unselfish and kind,
Few in this world his equal you'll find,
A beautiful life that come to an end,
He lived, he died everybody's friend.

IN MEMORY of my darling brother, Paul Calvin Brown, S 1-C, who was killed in service January 7th, 1944.
The month of January is here again,
The saddest month of all the year.
For two years ago today, our darling brother was taken away.
Gone from us but leaving fond memories death can never take away.
He had a smile for everyone.
A heart as pure as gold.
To those who knew him and loved him,
His memory will never grow old.

How we've listened for your footsteps;
How we've missed your smiling face.
But you left us to remember,
No one on earth can take your place.

Friends may think our sorrow's ended,
When at times they see us smile.
But little do they know the heartaches,
That we suffer al. the while.

There is grief that finds no comfort
There are wounds that do not heal.
The sorrow buried within our heart,
Is too deep to be revealed.

God is good, He gives us strength,
To bear our heavy cross.
He is the only one who knows,
How bitter is our loss.
